

Making Choices in City Council

The communication process I developed serves as an excellent decision-making tool. To that end, I was hired to do work for the Banning, California city council to help build consensus and set vision for city projects. To the left and below are drawings I did for a chamber of commerce building, expanded city development and a permanent building for a farmers' market.

"We tried all sorts of people to consult with the city council, but Kurt Hanks was the only one who was able to give us exactly what we needed."

A. Parker, former city manager and council liaison

